In the center of the great hall of gems in Wash. D.C. a crowd gathered, the year 1961. The display being unveiled was the Smithsonian Museum’s first showing of the largest Star Sapphire ever discovered, said to be billions of years old and known throughout history as a gem of great destiny and mythic power. The crowd rushed to see the 6 point white star that made the dark jewel come alive. The star in the center of the stone was such a phenomenon that some remained silent in a meditative state while others became strangely excited speaking unknown gibberish. Many surged toward the stone and several ran from the hall completely white and speechless. On this day, a blue diamond named Hope worn by a queen, and exhibited only a few feet away from the dark star stone, remained alone and ignored. Later it was written that hundreds claimed to have experienced nirvana while in the star’s presence. Some said they had seen the face of god, some saw the face of a woman, yet they only spoke a few words saying that it was a miracle they would remember all of their lives. In the corner of the room Jack Nary almost 5 years old stood and closed his eyes. His father left him with the mother and the child began to speak, “I am one with the one who is, I have returned.”

In 1937, Rubyvale Australia, a star child Roy Spencer discovered the largest sapphire on earth. The press name it “Star of Queensland,” but the Anuroii knew that star secrets would begin to be known. It was arranged for the “One Who Is” — Nary, to meet the star stone in the earth capital Washington D. C.. What is known is that the child spoke with the star stone many times and secrets lost, were remembered.

As the child spoke, the star stone covered the room in a golden light, and you felt a wonderful presence as if you had finally arrived home. The little child began to glow and speak softly words no one understood, and the star stone repeated the words of the boy. Then the star stone, rose in the case and a laser like white beam was sent to the boy. The Nary child began to float in the center of the light, 3 fingers on each small hand raised toward the star stone, and then he was gone. When the child was found 30 minutes later, telling his mother not to worry he repeated, “the light is my friend.” Jack Nary was found by a young beautiful nun that cold 3rd January morning, she said he had made 3 perfect golden angels in the pure white snow. When she asked how he had sculpted the perfect features, the child replied, “I was just playing with my friends the star angels, who fly in the light.” When Jack Nary was returned to his mother the nun Ana said her grandmother the 7th daughter of a 7th daughter spoke of “star angels that guide us and a star child that would come one day, to find the door to the stars that had been lost since the Maya had disappeared.” A whole civilization vanished she claimed “to the starlight.” Ana wore a dark star sapphire next to her cross, they hung between the outlines of her breasts. She said it was found by her grandmother near the Mexican village of Yaxcopoil in 1733. When Jack Nary’s mother suggested Ana meant her great grandmother Ana quietly explained, “No, all the 7th daughters in my family’s history have gone to the stars on the 6th of January, after 133 years on earth. As the nun Ana said good bye she kissed the little boy and said, “The circle is complete, I must go, U are ROII, the star child, the line continues, the door opens, the star time is near.” And she was gone. And the child Jack Nary proclaimed, “Momma, someday I will give you the star stone to wear,” and the mother replied, “Believe in your dream, it will take you where U must go . . .”

Star temples are planned for magical places where the ANCIENT UNIVERSAL ROYALS first arrived, and made love to the sons and daughters of earth, creating star children, the light of the world.
